Mary sat down on a chair and looked at the kitchen. It was a terrible mess again! She remembered that half an hour ago she had finished cleaning it.

She had washed all the dishes that were in (on) the sink, and also the empty pans that were on the stove. She had put the baking pan in (into) the oven and the eggs in (into) the fridge.

What was that under the kitchen table? Mary picked up an apple peel that was on the floor. Then she looked at the dirty hand towel and thought about it. Where did all that dirt come from? She thought it over, but couldn't understand it. She was too tired for that. How many times had she explained it to the children? They just didn't listen to her. They didn't seem to care for her. No, that wasn't true. They just didn't think about the problem. There was so much life to be lived! And they were in such to live it!

Mary felt much love for her children. She smiled. But what was there to smile at? Mary didn't know. So she just sat there on the chair and thought about the dirty kitchen. After all, who had had the crazy idea of having five children?
