When I was a child, I heard people tell me many things about someone called "God". I didn't quite understand but, at many times, I was very young and didn't pay much attention to anyone. They told me he was very, very nice, and I believed it. But when I didn't eat all my lunch, they said God would get angry at me, and I just couldn't understand why God would want me to eat something as terrible as beets with vinegar! I felt I would get sick if I ate them, and surely God wouldn't want me to get sick... I wished for everyone to eat the beets, so I didn't have to.

On Sundays the adults would take me to church. The words people said there had some kind of magic because they always made me sleep. And they said God would look down and see me sleeping and become angry. So I never really understood if God was good or bad when I was a child. After I grew up, people tried to tell me that people who went to church were good, because they knew everything about God. So I went to church. Among those people there weren't any people different from me, not better nor worse.

I sat down in the front row. The man that was reading the bible sounded so wonderful, but I knew him. He had killed his neighbor's dog because it made too much noise...

At night I would look over the Bible, and I couldn't understand most of it. The words were too difficult. I went to hundreds of churches and nobody knew how to tell me how I could find God. They said I had to pray, but would he talk to me if I prayed? He never did. Some people got angry at me because I asked too many questions they couldn't answer. So I stopped going to churches to find God. Specially because all churches told me he was there and not in the other church, so how would I know between the right church and the wrong church? And I finally stopped looking for God. After all, I didn't even know how to think of (about) him.

One day, I sat alone on (at) the beach in the evening watching the sun go down. The only noise I could hear was the water and the wind. The sky had so many colors I couldn't count them. The sea seemed to be dancing a waltz to the song the wind seemed to be singing. The sun slowly went into the sea and the sea became golden. It had never realized how perfect things were in nature until that moment. I looked something like a dream. And I finally "felt" God. Nothing anyone ever said to me about God showed me who he was like the silence of nature did. His eyes could be that sky, his arms could be the wind, his love could be the warm sun, and his heart as clear as the sea that waltzed with the sound of his voice...
